

What does it takes to be a Podcast Guest?

All you need is you.

Your life experiences, training and education are valuable assets. Most people get to a point in their life where they are able to look back and accept that they are where they are because of what they have been through, whether by choice or circumstance.

Genuine connections are made through story telling, and our Podcasting Guest Vetting Process identifies

1. The learnings, message and advice an experience has given you that is of value to others.
2. The facts, figures and evidence you have access to, by virtue of your occupation, position or field of study
3. The insights, opinions and expertise you have acquired over the years that is relevant and relatable.

Becoming a Podcast Guest is about demonstrating your skill in communicating the message, lots of information or your point of view to an audience of active listeners. Reading the room is half the battle and being in the state you want to create for your audience takes some practice, but if you have been doing it live to an audience for a while now then speaking into the ears of thousands of people during a podcast will come naturally.

To get the most impact, aligning yourself with the right host and subject topic is important. The content of your conversation needs to be relevant and relatable, expanding on knowledge of your audience. Your ability to engage and influence listeners will depend on what does not end up on the 'cutting room floor.' Experts are usually the authors of the research they conduct and can concisely articulate their opinion and debate an argument. They possess a sense of sureness, knowing and a capacity to explore contributing factors.

Creating Great Sound Waves

“The wisest decision I ever made was choosing to be listed on ShirePodGuest! It has helped me get booked as a guest on over a dozen podcasts in an incredibly short period of time. I love how podcasters can easily find me and invite me to be a guest on their show. The variety of podcasts give me opportunities to have more open conversations about mental illness whilst sharing my story” - Adam
